Abstract:	This collection contains correspondence, writings, notes, research material and other material by Anne Carroll Moore, an American children's librarian, lecturer, and children's book author and reviewer in the first half of the 20 th century.

Biographical Sketch

Anne Carroll Moore was born in Limerick, Maine, on 12 July 1871, the only daughter of Luther Sanborn Moore (1821-1892) and Sarah Hidden Barker (1826-1892). She graduated from Limerick Academy in 1889, then received a degree from Bradford Academy in 1891. When the death of both her parents and a sister-in-law made her plans to become a lawyer unattainable, she spent several years helping her now-widowed brother Harry raise his two children. Her brother suggested that she consider the emerging profession of librarian, so Moore applied to the State Library School in Albany, New York, but lacked the program's educational requirements. Undaunted, she then applied to the Pratt Institute School of Library Science in Brooklyn where she was accepted into the one-year program in 1895.

Moore received a degree from Pratt Institute School of Library Science in 1896. For ten years, she served as the head of the Children's Room at Pratt, the first such room in any library in the world. In 1899, she wrote to the American Library Association to ask for the creation of a Children's Division. A year later she was elected president of the new Children's Library Section.

In 1906, the New York Public Library hired Moore as the Superintendent of Children's Work, where she was in charge of children's programming at all NYPL branches as well as overseeing the Central Children's Room, which opened in 1911. Moore was particularly interested in developing oral storytelling within a library setting, and also made a point of creating collections of books for the immigrant children of New York in their native languages as well as English translations of their native tales.

In 1918, Moore delivered a series of lectures to a group of New York publishers and booksellers, promoting the need for quality writing for children. In 1921, Moore gave a series of lectures and toured the libraries of England and France for the American Library Association. During this tour she met Walter de la Mare, L. Leslie Brooke, and Beatrix Potter. She is credited with introducing all three to the American public. She also wrote children's books, the most famous entitled Nicholas: A Manhattan Christmas Story (1924) in which the main character was based on a puppet she used in her story times. This story was one of two runners up for the 1925 Newbery Medal. She wrote of her own childhood in My Roads to Childhood. (She was named Annie after an aunt, and officially changed her name to Anne in her fifties, to avoid confusion with Annie E. Moore, another woman who was also publishing material about juvenile libraries at that time.)

In 1927, she was invited by Utah State University President, E.G. Peterson, to guest lecture on campus. She fell in love with Logan, and before returning to New York, she wrote to her publishing and author friends. She asked them to donate books for a children's collection on campus. The collection was named in her honor and opened in 1937.

Moore eventually went on to become a highly influential children's book reviewer. From 1924 to 1930, she was the children's book reviewer for the New York Herald Tribune. By 1936, her reviews were also appearing in The Horn Book Magazine.

Moore was forced to retire in 1941, at age 70. The following year, she accepted an invitation to teach at the graduate school of librarianship at the University of California at Berkeley. Moore received honorary degrees from the University of Maine and Pratt Institute, which awarded her the Doctor of Letters in 1955. She remained active, writing and teaching for most of her remaining years. In 1960, she was awarded the Catholic Library Association's Regina Medal "for her pioneer work in children's library services." Moore died in New York City on 20 January 1961.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains correspondence, writings, notes, research material and other material by Anne Carroll Moore, an American children's librarian, lecturer, and children's book author and reviewer in the first half of the 20th century. It has been arranged into seven series. Series one contains diaries, photographs, programs, news clippings, an autograph book, an obituary, Moore's high school diploma, and a few other items. Series two contains mostly contains letter to Moore, but also includes copies of letters from Moore to Walter De la Mare and some incomplete letters. Series three contains copies of published and unpublished articles, speeches, book lists, notes, a bibliography, and part of the original manuscript of Nicholas: A Manhattan Christmas Story. Series four mostly contains correspondence with Bradford College after Moore graduated along with a speech given there and information about an exhibit at the college in 1956. Series five contains publications about the New York Public Library, book lists, an exhibition catalog, and a book of essays presented to Moore in 1956. Series six contains letters, news clippings, writings, and other material about Leo Frank. When young, Leo Frank frequently visited the children's department of the New York Public Library; in 1913, after he was unjustly arrested and imprisoned in Atlanta for the murder of Mary Phagan, Moore traveled there to plead for his release. He was later lynched. Series seven contains material about storyteller Marie L. Shedlock, John Drinkwater's funeral program, and a copy of Ginger and Pickles, A Play from the Story by Beatrix Potter.
